Paying for a Frolic.

Considerable complaint has been heard this season about lodged wheat. There are several causes for this lodging. Sometimes the stem is weak because of too rapid growth by an oversupply of available plant food. Sometimes the trouble lies in the variety and sometimes it is occasioned by insects that damage the stalks. In the cut, a reproduction from a pamphlet by Professor Comstock, is illustrated the sawfly borer, which has occasioned trouble in many localities by

while it reduces the yield but slightly, it weakens the stalk materially.

The adult insect is a four winged fly belonging to the order Hymenoptera, the order that includes the bees, wasps and ants; and it is a member of the family Tenthredinidse of this order, a family comprising the insects commonly known attacking the wheat when nearly ripe;

to the fact that in this family the female insects are furnished with a more or less sawlike organ. This rises near the candal end of the body, and is the ovipositor. By means of it the insects are able to make incisions in the tissues of plants for the reception of their eggs.

On examining the stalks of wheat at harvest time by splitting them through-out their length, it was found that some of them had been tunneled by an insect larva. This larva had eaten a passage through each of the joints so that it could pass freely from one end of the cavity of the straw to the other.

If infested straws be examined a week or ten days before the ripening of the wheat, the cause of this injury can be found at work within them. It is at that time a yellowish, milky white worm, varying in size from one-fifth of an inch to one-half an inch in length. The smaller ones may not have bored through a single joint, while the larger ones will have tunneled all of them except, perhaps, the one next to the

As the grain becomes ripe the larva works its way toward the ground, and at the time of the harvest the greater number of them have penetrated to the root. Here in the lowest part of the cavity of the straw they make preparations for the winter.

New Yorker the most obvious method of combating the insect is to attack it while it is in the stubble, that is to say, some time between the wheat harvest and the first of the following May. If the stubble can be burned in the autumn the larva in it can be destroyed. The same thing could be accomplished by plowing the stubble under, which would prevent the escape of adult flies. In the cut a represents the female fly beginning to oviposit; b, female with ovipositor inserted in the straw; c, in-the Northwest, recently had the following to say in Prairie Farmer: The essentials for making cider vine gar on a small scale are a grinder to grind up the apples into a fine pulp, a good press to extract the juice, barrels to put the juice in, a frost proof room or cellar to store the product in, and, of course, a good supply of decent apples.

should be taken to reject all immature, wilted and rotten apples. When the cider lect from you. I dont want to leve is made it should be put into good iron but will be forced to do so unless bound barrels and ranked up out of doors, but in the shade, and allowed to you settle. ferment. The barrels should be placed on timbers or poles elevated from the ground sufficiently to allow the contents to be run off into other barrels.

On the approach of freezing weather rack off the vinegar stock into clean barrels (only three-fourths filled) by means of a faucet placed in the end of the bar-rel, or preferably with a syphon made of five-eighths rubber tubing. This should be raised an inch above the bottom of the barrel to avoid drawing off the sediment. All settlings should be put into a separate barrel. The barrels can how be ranked up in their winter quarters, the bungs taken out and remain undisturbed until the contents become good vinegar, provided they are kept in a furnace heated cellar or artificially heated room.

An ordinary cellar is too cool to make vinegar quickly, and if such a place is used for winter storage the barrels can be removed to a common shed on the approach of warm weather, remembering always to rack off the contents before a barrel is moved. Never put barrels in the sun in hot weather, as they will be spoiled and the contents lost. When the vinegar is thoroughly made a cool, dry cellar is an excellent place to store it, and the barrels may be filled and bunged up.

To make good cider or vinegar us good, clean apples; exposure to heat and air is what makes vinegar; to have bright, clear vinegar free from must, rack it be-fore moving it, if it has been standing any length of time, and thoroughly clean barrels as soon as emptied. Good vinegar cannot be made out of a large quantity of water and a little cider. Strong, late made cider may bear the addition of a little water, but that made early in the season will not.

Agricultural Notes The Porter is a profitable apple. No stock appreciates a dry, clean bed

Remember that lard thinned with kerosene is good to clean out the lice that infest the hogs' winter quarters. Many farmers use parchment butter paper in place of cloth for covering but-ter rolls. They say it helps to sell their

of the Varieties Most Popular for Feeding Cattle Described. Farmers as well as dairymen are each of the animal, but being also of value as food for milk and meat.

GOLDEN TANKARD MANGEL WURZEL Golden yellow tankard, the mangel wurzel depicted in our cut, is regarded by many dairymen as one of the most profitable varieties. It is an exceedingly prolific sort, and is said to be both nutritious and hardy.

The long yellow mangel wurzel is a quantity can be grown on an acre with Another productive sort is the yellow ovoid mangel wurzel. This is of distinct shape, being intermediate between the long and globe varieties. It is hardy and Lane's improved imperial sugar is an American variety of finer grain than the ordinary beet, being good for table use as well as cattle food.

Yellow globe is a sort too well known to require special mention. It is well adapted for growing in shallow soils. The long red mangel warzel produces roots of enormous size, smooth and regular in shape, with a small top.

In order to be well preserved for gradual consumption during the winter, Thorburn advises that mangel wurzels be heaped to a height of perhaps six feet on a dry, sloping situation; cover at first with a piece of canvas, and as the cold increases this should be replaced by about six inches of either salt hay, straw, seaweed, or even cornstalks. Lest this covering be displaced by the wind a light layer of earth is necessary. So soon as this surface soil becomes frozen about six or eight inches more of earth should be placed over the entire heap. By following up this gradual process of covering all danger of heating will be obviated and the roots will keep in perfect
